74 High Street, Colchester

6.30 for 7pm Wednesday 12 February 2014

Economics – rethink or sink!

Classical economics is a castle. Unfortunately it is built on sand. Professor Edward Tsang of the Department of Computer Science and Electrical Engineering at the University of Essex will illustrate how, with technology brought into the scene, classical economics must be thoroughly revised. But how? There isn't a new castle, but Edward Tsang will explain how we could approach the problem with the aim of ensuring that the findings are relevant to reality and all the flawed and unreasonable assumptions are removed.

There will be ample opportunity for Q &A and discussion, and to enjoy the refreshments at The Minorities Garden Café.

Admission is FREE.

Café Scientifique, which started in Leeds in 1998, is a forum aimed at bringing the public and scientists together to learn about and discuss current scientific issues. The speakers give their time free of charge. Further information from Ray White on 01621 891598 or view www.cafescientifique.org

The Colchester Café Scientifique is sponsored by the University of Essex.
